Dynamite.

A new blasting powder, called dynamite, has been invented by Mr. Nobel, who a stready known to the public as the experimenter on that dangerous compound nown as nitroglycerine. A series of aperiments were recently made in the prosence of a number of sciutific gentlemen at the Merstham iray Limestone Works, near Radhill, ingland, who were fully convinced of the ower of the new agent from the tests applied. The following is a desuription of he powder and an account of the tests made.

for which is claimed force of a remarkable degree, null a harmlessness nader ordinary confirmed, to make it one of the mest pepular and desirable of explosive agests. The canses which render gangewers and nitroglycerine so dangerous to handle or convey by the commen case of transit have no effect input it. Nitroglycerine explodes at 210 degrees Fahrenheit, gun cotton at 100 degrees fahrenheit, gun cotton at 100 degrees. A common fire at 1,200 degrees; but a much higher temperature than this is required to ignite dynamite, which must be placed somewhere between 1,400 and 3,230 degrees. A thin deal-hox containing ten pounds of the compound was placed over a reging fire; the box was consumed, but there was no explosion, and the dynamite mingled harmlessly with the ashes. It was in other ways placed in minudiate contact with fire, with the same results. Ginpowder was explosied near it without effect. The supecionity of the material over the dangerons explosives as to which concussion would be certain destruction was acknowledged by several practical persons present connected with the carrying trades. Ten pounds of dynamite were enclosed in a second deal box and hurled from the top of a shill. It fell sixty Draws in a power. Every woman knows, and every man, too, believe me, that, when well dressed, one feels better contented with oneself and more at ease with others; which is one reason, perhaps, why Louisville ladies are so calcitated for their grace of person and affability of manner. And, as so many bright eyes dance each morning down the column of the Journal, I have bethought me how some would sparkle with pleasure if they could behold the fresh budget of Parla fashions, sent me by a dear friend far away, in a package of French magazines full of colored plates and fine on gravings of the latest modes, and such a clear letter-press of technical explanations and light dress gossip. And, as this part of the world is generally a month or two in receiving and appropriating French movelites, if has struck my fancy to scribble off news of the wardrobe and toilette for the benefit of have as a descrete, who must desire that their beautiful city should, in this respect, keep piace with New York.

jewels, seem destrous only to forget them, and to shine in ornaments whose only value consists in artistic construction." How frequently a true lady of the grand-numde across the water would be shocked at Saratogs and Cape May.

It is not yet a settled question whether long or short dreases will carry the day. Tail and majestic women obstinately cling to the flowing and trained robes; while les petues equally patronize the costume short and conjusting. Judge T. was under the less petues and water to be a good deal of matter of feet. Feet without fear and without regroach are rare; and what to binned a near the latter of the normal surface of the new siles of the new siles of the new solid in the latter of the new siles of the new siles of the new siles. "There is magic in a pretty foot;" and apropos to the subject, the fashion column of Le Montear de la Mode has an epigrammatic remark worthy of Rakeian, and translatable only thus: "The foot most distinguishes the man from the woman. Among women the foot is the commencement of the limb; among men, it is the end of the pantalonal" And the same anthority slyly hints that the constry and the beach permit abundant occasions for admiration and jesiousy on this score, so that we may safely conclude that abord dresses prevail a summer resorts, while traveling attire, we are decidedly told, is invariably short. An elequent argument in their favor is investigated and antifering masculines in the ball-room, and more than one grande dame has langurated learned to repeat of the skirt, most frequently with a broad box-plaited ruffle, headed by rows of plain ribbon, which is again much in vogue as a decoration; and with lew exceptions, in both styles, there is a short upper jape cultu to fanta stic ab spec, looped with large bows, and hordered with quillings. Waists are still short but are antificiently lowered in the neck to show the whole rise and turn of the throat—so fascinating a beauty in woman, and so long concealed by the high corranges. Sashes have from two to four floats and from two to half a dozn large bowe, corrangenced with narrow lace and rings, edged with narrow lace and and rings, edged with narrow lace and ruches. Marie Actoinet e fichus are atill up the back and down the front, while small capes just covering the shoulders and the Bashiek mantle begin to divide their enpremacy. Hoops are quite small, almost invisible in the short costume; many are adopting the side paniers of the time of Lumis the Six eenth, which even fashion can never make graceful. Bots for the country are frequently manufactured of yellow leather, and slippera are adorned with colored astin bows.

Hats are smaller than ever; they have become charming nothinge, composed of the procession halted at the Capital gate, when a Lieut Rodgers, of the 5th cavalup the back and down the front, while Hats are emailer than ever; they have become charming nothings, composed of a single flower or bird fastened on floats of tinle, or mere garlands of blossoms forming a diadem. Ostrieb plames and the vapory marabout constitute also a principal crammentation of round hat this aceson; many of them have attached tille or ace barbes, fastened in front by a flower. Two new styles of bonnet, however, present themselvee, and seem to presage a change in size and shape; ons is a mere border of silk in front, edged with lace over a diadem, and a deep fall behind composed of tulle and lace, with thile barbes caught under the chin, and ribbon atrings fied under the ching, and behind composed of tulle and lees, with tulle barbes caught under the chin and ribbon strings fied under the chin and ribbon strings fied under the ching on. The other has the appearance of a very pretty and becoming night-cap. WEAT THE LOUISVILLE PRESS SAYS.

An announcement to the public, and particularly to the theket-holders in the Paschall Heuse drawing, appears in the Jouenal, this morning. We regard the postponement as a favorable symptom and when we announced itseveral weeke ago we meent no discredit to the scheme, on the contrary, the determination to seil all the ticksta is a guarantee of persect slarnees, and an actual protection to every ticket-holder. In addition to this, it should be stated that Majou W. H. Rhea, the general agent in this part of the country, is as reliable as the State bank. We have shown our conditions to the country that the say of the country is as reliable as the State bank. We have shown our conditions of the commending it to our readers. — Louisville Journal, July 1854. etandard-bearer, has prevailed long erough for the good of the party.

Capit, Graves was a candidate for the last Congress. The people were for him, as shown by expressions of primary meetings. The convention met, and it was thought best to nominate our present representative; and at the mention of his name, for the sake of harmony, Captain Graves'a friends withdrew him, and a point of the momination and election of Mr. Knott. This should not be eatermed a political snicide, but should endear him more to those who desire the unity and hermony of the party.

Our party is now atrong enough to give to its tearless advectes the rewards that it eir labor is untitled to, and without whose exertions the party would not have had its present strength. Let us be just. Capt. Graves has done as much, has escribed in much for the party as ary man in the district, end we hope the prople will give to his pretensions a proper consideration when they come to select a candidate to represent us in the next Congress.
